BOUMI
 a Business, a Philosophy
 a Movement

Boumi as a business is an example of “social enterprise”, an entrepreneurial approach to solving a social problem. It combines the passion of a social mission with a business innovation and determination to bring about societal changes.

Boumi as a philosophy strives to bring changes to society through empowering the impoverished.

Boumi as a movement emphasizes self-reliance and family employment.

Boumi generates a wide range of products including place-mats, curtains, cushion covers, tea cozies, coasters, bedclothes, bathroom accessories and casual wear.

Boumi is distinguished from other products in the region by its wholly unique blend of traditional Afghan indigenous (“Boumi”) designs with contemporary trends.

Using only Afghan grown cotton, Boumi incorporates aspects of Afghanistan's culture and history into many of its products, thereby giving a distinctive flavor to that which is Boumi.

The factory building was designed and built to accommodate 300 employees with adequate office space.

Boumi was launched in 2005. The company has expanded rapidly from its initial staff of 15 women and three men to a workforce today of 250 women and 50 men.
